Subject: Microsoft Settlement is unsuitable

To whom it may concern,

After having read and considered Scott Rosenberg's Salon article, I find myself forced to agree that his points are valid. I have been appalled at the manner in which Microsoft has been allowed to twist the spirit of the mandates set before it and constantly thumb its nose at authority like a five-year-old making faces at its mother behind her back. If Microsoft is truly guilty, of which I believe there's no question now, then amends must be made by them for their years of unlawful conduct. I do not believe the settlement as it stands has the power to adequately enforce that, and I would strongly encourage any who would listen to ensure that the future Microsoft will neither regard this as a simple "slap on the wrist" nor be able to repeat its horrible offenses.

Sincerely,
Chris Meyer
